Spektrum: Publications of the German Studies Association

Spektrum: Publications of the German Studies Association, published by Berghahn Books, represents the culmination of four long-standing trends within the association:

- The tendency of members to organize their work around common topics and to present their collaborations in series of panels at the association's annual conference
- An effort both to expand the GSA's sponsorship of scholarly work into a broader array of disciplines and historical periods and to strengthen thematic connections between them
- Increasing collaboration among scholars from around the world who share interests in the society, politics, and culture of German-speaking peoples, from the Middle Ages to the present day
- The GSA's burgeoning role as a venue for the introduction of state-of-the-art research and scholarship on German-speaking peoples to an Anglophone audience

Spektrum seeks to promote these trends by providing a venue for the publication of scholarly monographs and collections of papers originally presented at the association's annual conference and/or conceived in the spirit of the GSA. Our hope is that the volumes of Spektrum, taken as a whole, will reflect the dizzying variety of GSA members in terms of scholarly discipline—cultural anthropology, musicology, sociology, art, theology, film studies, philosophy, art history, literary criticism, history, and political science—as well as methodology, subject matter, and historical period.

Interdisciplinary Networks

Networks are platforms tasked with focusing sustained interdisciplinary attention on topics of interest to the GSA membership by distributing calls for papers and forming panel series for the annual conference on a regular basis. Networks also have maintained list-serves, blog sites, and webpages, and have developed publications (journal issues and book volumes) derived from their panel activities.

GSA networks are formed in consultation with the GSA's standing Interdisciplinary Network Committee, comprising all network coordinators, and its co-chairs. Network coordinators are nominated by the IC co-chairs and confirmed by the GSA President and Executive Director for three-year terms.

DAAD and German Studies in North America

DAAD German Studies Professors, Lecturers and Sponsored Chairs

In support of the increasingly recognized objective of universities in the United States and Canada to enhance the international dimension of the curriculum and guided by mutual interest in strengthening the longstanding tradition of transatlantic academic cooperation, DAAD New York has established a cooperative program to place German academics in longer-term visiting faculty positions at North American host institutions.

The jointly funded visiting faculty program—the German share of which is provided by the Federal Foreign Office—was inaugurated in 1984 at the University of Minnesota. The program was initially designed with a view to fostering curricular innovation in the field of German Studies and to support a multi-faceted approach to the study of things German in American and Canadian higher education. More recently, the number of positions at German or Language Departments has increased and new lectureships specifically offering language instruction have been established. Over the years, more than 160 German visiting faculty from a variety of disciplines have contributed an authentic and up-to-date perspective from a contemporary German point of view to the study of Germany, its language, its recent history and its current political, social, and economic reality.

The DAAD visiting faculty program is geared towards the following objectives:

- to teach German or provide instruction on recent historical, political, social, economic, legal, and cultural developments in Germany, both in and of itself and in the European context;
- to foster an international dimension in the curriculum of the discipline concerned by way of enhancing possibilities for student exchanges, staff mobility, curricular development with universities in Germany, and joint scholarly projects.

There are currently 16 German scholars in the North American visiting faculty program: 14 German Studies Professors, 1 Lecturer and 1 Sponsored Chair for German and European Studies. Candidates for these positions are selected by a bi-national academic committee in an open and rigorous multi-step recruiting process.

DAAD German Studies Professors:

Micha Fiedlschuster	York University
Thomas Gurke	University of Minnesota-Twin Cities
Jan Hansen	University of California, San Diego

DAAD Centers for German and European Studies

Responding to the long history of close cooperation and friendship between Germany and North America, the DAAD has also established Centers for German and European Studies in the USA and Canada at which scholarly research, contemporary affairs and the interests of the general public are united in matters relating to Germany and Europe. The predominant aim of the continued support for the Centers is to provide a young generation of academics with expert knowledge on Germany and Europe in order to propagate expertise and to ensure continued cooperation between Germany and its international partners.

Beginning in 1990, six Centers for German and European Studies were successively established at American universities, followed by four Centers at Canadian universities as of 1997. While the initial funding with joint financing from German and North American sources has since been completed, both the DAAD (with funds provided by the Federal Foreign Office) and partner universities (with funding from their own budgets, from endowments and gifts, and from state/provincial, federal, and other sources) remain committed to continuing these initiatives.

Although each Center has its particular emphasis and focus, predominant areas of activity include:

- providing extensive interdisciplinary teaching and support
- raising the quality of graduate education within the specific discipline
- developing and implementing new degree programs (with a focus on Master and PhD programs)
- expanding project-based research on the current and contemporary development of Germany
- establishing programs for visiting lecturers and conducting guest lectures with leading experts on Germany and Europe
- reaching out to the general public to increase institutional visibility, to attain the role of point of reference for German and European Studies on a regional and national level, and to provide political consultancy

The Centers emphasize collaboration in the humanities and social sciences in order to promote the academic study of Germany in a European context by way of an interdisciplinary approach. At the same time, they help to further develop scholarly networks and political, economic, and cultural ties between Europe and North America.

Volume 33 of Contemporary Austrian Studies (CAS) is dedicated to regional histories of Austria. Martin Knoll from the University of Salzburg provides a survey on where Austrian regional history is written. H. Glenn Penny from UCLA pleads for a regional history of what he calls “the South German borderlands” in the global context from Salzburg through Bavaria and Baden-Württemberg to Berne, Switzerland. A number of essays on Western Austrian regional history add to the picture of a variety of regional histories of Austria. A FORUM on the Allied bombing war in the Tyrol in World War II and a ROUNDTABLE of reviews of John Boyer’s magnum opus Austria 1867–1955, along with a number of book reviews, complete the volume.

A New Peace of Münster, in Dutch, German and English with English subtitles, 45 min. Trailer

Simon Richter (University of Pennsylvania) and Caroline Schaumann (Emory University) host a screening and conversation about A New Peace of Münster (2023), a documentary directed by Maria Kolossa based on citizen workshops about the impact of climate change in the Netherlands and across the German border. What happens in a country where most citizens already live up to 7 meters below sea level if the sea level rises to 2 meters by 2100 and 5 meters by 2150? Will water defenses hold? Or will people move to higher ground in the East and across the German border? Under the guise of a “New Peace of Münster,” this documentary follows Simon Richter and Patrick Nederkoorn, a prominent Dutch comedian, as they involve stakeholders in the borderland cities of Münster and Enschede, Vreden, and Winterswijk in discussions inspired by Nederkoorn’s German language show, Die orangene Gefahr: Die Holländer kommen! Informed by experts from the Netherlands, Germany, and the US, Dutch and German residents are challenged to negotiate the principles of a future peace: peace with each other, peace with strangers, and peace with nature. In the midst of climate doom, A New Peace of Münster offers an upbeat approach to the topic of managed retreat.

9:00pm–10:00pm, Augusta

Mo Asumang, Germany’s first Afro-German TV presenter (1996), reads excerpts of her autobiography Mo und die Arier: Allein unter Rassisten und Neonazis (2016) and discusses clips of her documentaries Roots Germania (2008) and Die Arier (2014). Together with Heidi Denzel, they will present short exercises and dialogue techniques of the Mo:Lab-Workshop Dialog mit Andersdenkenden. Moderator: Heidi Denzel.

Introduction: Damani Partridge, GSA Vice President, University of Michigan

Are you interested in gaining insight into the current direction of German studies scholarship? Are you curious about topics that may not be covered in panel and seminar sessions? Do you have a desire to experience different presentation formats? If so, we invite you to join us for a lunch event on Friday, September 27 in Atlanta, where the GSA will be hosting a special plenary session titled “Food for Thought.” In an effort to diversify and expand lecture formats and invigorate the luncheon conversation, we have invited eight colleagues to share condensed video presentations of their work. These presentations, designed to provide informative overviews, will cover a wide range of disciplines represented within the Association. We specifically sought out emerging and early career scholars, ranging from post-doctoral researchers to recently appointed assistant professors, to present their research. We are thrilled by the enthusiastic response we have received from these colleagues, and we hope you will show your support by attending the Friday luncheon. Prepare to be captivated by this thought-provoking series of presentations.

GSA Mentoring Initiatives

Members of the newly formed Mentoring Awards and Initiatives Committee are excited to organize two new formats for this year’s conference and invite GSA membership to participate. Please join us for the roundtable Navigating the Job Market on Friday September 27 at 3.55 p.m. (in Georgia 5), which will feature short statements by seven participants with varied experiences and institutional affiliations. Issues this roundtable will consider include career guidance and diverse career trajectories; institutional contexts, specificities, and expectations; advising practices and mentoring; application documents and process (including resources available to applicants); and advocacy. Our aim is not only to provide a forum for exchange, but also to solicit member input on mentoring initiatives within the GSA going forward.

We are also implementing 1:1 mentoring sessions, based on successful models at allied organizations. We have scheduled 30-minute time slots on Friday and Saturday between 10 a.m.-12 p.m. and 2.00-3.30 p.m. (locations posted in conference app) for those who signed up to mentor/be mentored following our call to members. For questions, please contact committee chair Ela Gezen (egezen@umass.edu).

Exhibition “Willy Brandt 1913–1992. A Life for Freedom, Peace and Reconciliation between Nations”

Capitol North

As an opponent of the Nazis, Federal Chancellor, Nobel Prize laureate, and international statesman Willy Brandt was a staunch proponent of peace, freedom, and solidarity. He left behind a rich political legacy that is still today ground-breaking in many aspects. Concentrating on ten historical places and events in his life, the international touring exhibition demonstrates Brandt’s political philosophy and actions.

The exhibition takes its viewers around the globe and through world history: To places like Oslo as the city of émigrés during the Nazi era, Berlin as a divided city, and Moscow as the site of diplomatic negotiations during the Cold War. A further spotlight illuminates Brandt’s deep ties to the United States. At multiple times over the weekend, there is the opportunity to explore the topics of the exhibition together with a historian of the Federal Chancellor Willy Brandt Foundation.

SEMINAR DESCRIPTIONS AND PARTICIPANTS

7, 110, 208. Emerging Scholars Workshop: “Global German Studies and the Politics of Belonging”

Over the past decade or so, graduate programs across the country have contracted. Fewer graduate students now encounter fewer regular graduate courses that have often also become more general in content in order to produce satisfactory enrollment. As a result, much of the specialized but crucial field training has moved into one-on-one tutorials and directed readings. The ESW seeks to give the up-and-coming cohort of scholars access to the leading faculty in their field, increase the advice and mentoring they receive, and allow them to come together for sustained professional conversations. The goal is to enable the next generation of Germanists to produce their best possible work, be competitive across fields, and contribute to the vitality, relevance, and productivity of our field at large.

1, 103, 202. Asian German Studies Seminar

Participants consider historical and contemporary diasporas of Asians in German-speaking Central Europe and German-speakers in Asia, including their literary, historical, sociological, and specific cultural production, such as novels and films. This seminar welcomes any topic, but is particularly interested in the following five areas: (1) transnational contact (literary, economic, political, intellectual, philosophical); (2) class and income disparities that complicate Asian German narratives; (3) comparative literature, image studies, and the challenges and opportunities of translation, including consumer culture; (4) migration, post-migration, asylum, and immigration issues; and (5) collective efforts (institutions/organizations, social movements, activism, (anti-)racism, postcolonial studies, mobility/diasporic anti-colonialism). This seminar continues the success of the panel series begun in 2009, fostering a lively scholarly community engaged with contacts between Asians and Germans.

2, 104, 203. Austrian Sexualities

The history and cultures of sexuality in German-language spheres have held a central place in the boom in sexuality studies over the last decades. Yet, the recent consolidation of knowledge and shifts towards aspects such as queer and trans studies have been predominantly focused on Germany (Evans 2023; Sutton 2023; Marhoefer 2015, 2022, Taylor/Timm/Herrn 2017). The specificity of Austrian Studies within this configuration has been explored somewhat in the areas of fin de siècle and Red Vienna, but has more often remained under-examined. This seminar seeks new directions in Sexuality Studies from an Austrian perspective, encompassing historical, visual, literary, and cultural analysis. Key themes may include: Berlin vs. Vienna; Land vs. Stadt; how Austrian and German queer and trans histories overlap or differ; transnational Austria (globalizing Austrian Studies through/with Sexuality Studies); intersectional approaches, including Gender Studies, Medical Humanities and Disability Studies; embodied sexuality, such as performativity and activism.

5, 106, 206. Contemporary German Literature as Media Event

Contemporary literature is defined by an explosion of paratexts in a wide variety of media, including social-media posts, podcasts, talk shows, book prizes, readings, or even accompanying Netflix series, all of which can transform a publication into a multimedia event. Conversely, these paratextual phenomena have crossed the threshold into works of German-language fiction, informing what stories are told and how they are told. To bring this ecosystem of literature into view, the seminar examines how twenty-first-century German fiction interacts with, relies on, and reflects on multimedia paratexts. Discussion points include how literature such as Sanyal's I den titti (2021) or Stuckrad-Barre's Noch wach? (2022) model media events and phenomena of going viral; how writing in social-media environments has engendered a rise of autofiction and autotheory; and how works participate in media-driven movements, such as how Kracht's Eurotrash (2021) or Wilp-ert's Nichts, was uns passiert (2018) relate to the #MeToo movement.

6, 109, 207. The Diversities of Care in the Long Nineteenth Century

Recently, the concept of “care” has attracted increased attention within and beyond academia, especially since COVID. This seminar aims to explore the historical-cultural roots of “care,” particularly during the long nineteenth century, when medical care became institutionalized and seen as labor; when care for the environment confronted rapid industrialization; when scientists and colonizers wrought ecological destruction while transporting flora, fauna, and people across oceans in order to “care” for them in gardens or zoos; where changing gender norms demanded a re-evaluation of care as “women’s work”; and where ascendant materialism transformed the philosophical, moral, and ethical underpinnings of care. The seminar invites contributions from diverse areas (environmentalism, medical humanities, gender studies, emotion studies, disability studies, philosophy, etc.) to show how broadly this term was applied, how its meaning shifted in the course of the nineteenth century, and what impact this has on our theoretical and conceptual engagements with “care” today.

8, 111, 209. Food and German Studies: Creative Explorations

This seminar brings Food Studies in conversation with German Studies. We explore how cultural studies research on food can apply to our work in German Studies and encourage participants to think about their work in relation to the broader field of Food Studies. Recent scholarship has addressed questions of food insecurity, examined connections between food and emotion, and discussed food in relation to multiculturalism. Our seminar builds on this work and continues conversations about the politics of food in German contexts across different media and genres, from fiction and film to graphic novels and television. We hope to address highly politicized topics such as national belonging, health, labor, and climate change.

Possible topics include food and: identities, culture(s), media, race, class, power, health (myths), precarity, bodies, gender, normativity, fatphobia, capitalism, ecology/ environmentalism, the politics of care, etc.

32, 136, 228. German Theater for/against the Anthropocene? (sponsored by the Environmental Studies Network)

Theater is a medium which has traditionally centered humans and human experience. But the human-planetary paradigm is rapidly shifting. The many intersecting global environmental, social justice, and cultural crises present new opportunities and challenges. With greater urgency in recent years, theater makers have imagined a more habitable, positive future on this planet and participated in shifting entrenched forms of collective knowledge and cultural production. How can we create productive ‘more-than-human’ encounters on stage? What is lacking from current aesthetic theories and practice? Which hierarchies and traditions associated with the anthropos need dismantling? How can we push boundaries of performance and scholarship in the German-speaking theater context to respond to the impulses and needs of our current moment? This seminar seeks to interrogate and expand on these and other questions.

10, 112, 210. Geschlecht: Sex, Race, Species

This seminar departs from the troubling word Geschlecht, meaning sex, gender, race, species, generation, lineage. It is oriented by a double hypothesis: First, the entanglement contained in Geschlecht generatively connects urgent contemporary debates in critical race studies, queer/trans theory, animal studies, and Anthropocene thought. Second, these contemporary debates can be productively engaged by revisiting earlier generations of writing about Geschlecht. To test this hypothesis, the seminar is guided by three generational constellations: the 1910s and 20s, between Kafka, Heidegger, and Lasker-Schüler; responses to this earlier constellation in the 1970s and 80s, notably Bachmann, Derrida, and Deleuze; contemporary approaches that variously relate to these lines, such as Judith Butler, Dipesh Chakrabarty, Mel Y. Chen, J. M. Coetzee, Elfriede Jelinek, Zakiyyah Iman Jackson, and Paul Preciado. We invite critical engagement with these lineages and welcome consideration of work by other writers of, and ways of writing, Geschlecht.

34, 139, 229. Integrating Digital Humanities and German Studies: Methods, Theory, Practice (sponsored by the Digital Humanities Network)

While the humanities have always incorporated empirical and formal approaches, the debate around Nan Z. Da's "The Computational Case [...]" revealed that digital methods can be at odds with the paradigms of established humanities scholarship. Current AI-driven methods like ChatGPT in particular raise questions about how arguments could be made "digitally" that align with traditional humanities scholarship enough to be convincing (e.g. in terms of reproducibility and explainability). This seminar thus aims to delineate the state of the art in "digital" German Studies and facilitate a discussion of the epistemic consequences of digital methods for the discipline: How are digital methods relevant for German Studies, and what are angles of humanist inquiry into digital methods and culture? How could we conceptualize a digital methodology that is productively integrated with established humanities scholarship? What are the political and disciplinary stakes of this integration? And how can faculty and instructors integrate GPT4 in their teaching?

35, 140, 230. Interplanetary Perspectives: Cosmic Fictions and Figures of Other Worlds

Since the Copernican revolution, the idea of other worlds on other planets has served as a key metaphor for defining the contingency of the human perspective, and as a speculative means of reversing the earthbound view of the cosmos. While dominant narratives of the achievement of planetary perspective have tended to emphasize either its triumphal (Blumenberg) or alienating (Arendt, Heidegger) aspects, our seminar will collaboratively assemble and discuss an archive that complicates this intellectual-historical grand narrative by considering the imaginative horizons opened by experiments with cosmic and interplanetary perspective. We seek scholars from a range of time periods and approaches to explore the unique possibilities and challenges of an aesthetic conception of our planet in relation to others. Topics might include: multiplicity of worlds in early German aesthetic theory; points of contact between science fiction and scientific fictions; visualizations of (inter)planetary; reconceptions of alienation as a productive form of defamiliarization.

14, 115, 213. Literary Translation and/as Scholarship

This seminar considers the practice of translation in relation to academic scholarship. We will address pragmatic issues, such as the evaluation of translation in hiring decisions, tenure and promotion assessments, etc., as well as theoretical questions that arise for scholars who translate. Does the translator's relationship to the text, or to its author, differ from the scholar's? Is it possible to occupy both positions at once? In addition, we will devote time to a workshop-style discussion of translations in progress. Translations may be from German to English or vice versa. We welcome translation or subtitling projects undertaken for academic purposes (e.g., as part of a thesis or dissertation) as well as those intended for publication, teaching purposes, and other kinds of public distribution. The seminar discussion will include workshop-style feedback on the translation, but we will also consider how each translation is positioned within an academic context.

40, 143, 232. Marxisms and German Studies

In light of current political challenges like the climate catastrophe, the global resurgence of fascism, and the hegemony of capitalism, thinkers have been returning to Marx's texts in order to contest and pluralize its legacies. Marxist perspectives continue to shape critical approaches from postcolonial studies to critiques of racial capitalism and ecocritical thought. While the work of Marx and the countless traditions that invoke his name are arguably more alive than ever, the relationship between German Studies and Marxisms remains curiously undefined. How can German Studies contribute to the crucial work of pluralizing Marxism, and what role can Marxisms play in defining the place of German Studies in an academy under increasing economic and political pressures? This seminar aims to expand understandings of what Marxism is and how German Studies can contribute to newly emerging debates in areas including Black Marxism, decolonial Marxism, feminist and queer Marxism, and indigenous Marxism.

18, 117, 216. Peripheral Vision: Cinematic Exile on and off the Camera

Recent work, like DeCelles's Recollecting Lotte Eisner and Horak and Seyfert's Enchanted by Cinema, applies contemporary methods such as queer historiography and postcolonial studies to overlooked archives of exile. Inspired by such scholarship, our seminar asks: How does it change our perspective on cinematic exile to look beyond Hollywood auteurs like Fritz Lang and Billy Wilder and experiment with new approaches? What happens if we focus on lesser-known directors and actors as well as writers, critics, and technicians? What if we widen the angle of our lens to capture cinematic migrations other than Berlin to Hollywood in the 1930s? We invite scholars at all career stages to share their research on cinematic exiles to and from Germany in any historical period. We especially welcome research into lesser-known filmmakers, migratory paths, and career pathways and scholarship that examines exile in conjunction with gender, sexuality, class, ethnicity, race, nation, and disability.

43, 146, 234. Poetry Doing Things

Poems can mourn, love, or celebrate; commemorate a friend, an event, or a hero; call for resistance or political action; formulate ideas; express emotions; and test or expand the possibilities of language. This seminar will explore questions of how poetry is doing these, and other, things, and examine how poetry's capacity to act and do shapes our demands on the genre, by discussing selected theoretical and lyric texts from the 17th century to the present. We will approach poetry's commitment to doing things from three angles: 1) as the poet's task or impulse, 2) as the work of poetic form and language, and 3) as an imagined future or outcome. The seminar's most relevant conceptualizations of poetic action will be proposed for publication in Konturen, followed by a panel series at the 2025 GSA expanding on those concepts, and an edited volume/special issue on Poetry Doing Things in 2026.

19, 119, 217. Politisch schreiben in der deutschsprachigen Gegenwartsliteratur: Methodische und theoretische Annäherungen

Die deutschsprachige Literaturlandschaft ebenso wie die dazugehörigen Diskurse wandeln sich: Gegenwartsromane wie Salzmanns Außer sich, Otos Adas Raum und Aydemirs Dschinns spielen eine wichtige Rolle in gesellschaftlichen Aushandlungsprozessen um Migration, Sprache, Gender und Erinnerung. Sie erzählen nicht nur vielfältige Positionalitäten, Erfahrungen, Geschichten und Identitäten, sondern schaffen auch neue (Erzähl-) Formen und Ästhetiken. Anders als eine rein autofiktionale Lesart dieser Romane oder eine Negierung ihrer Ästhetiken unter dem Stichwort des populären Realismus (Baßler) adressiert das Seminar neue Lesarten und methodisch-theoretische Zugänge. Fokussiert werden Formen des politischen Schreibens mit dem Ziel, Theorien und Methoden für die Erforschung gegenwärtiger Romane zu diskutieren. Im Mittelpunkt stehen folgende Fragen: Was macht politisches Schreiben in der Gegenwartsliteratur aus? Inwiefern lässt sich mit Blick auf die Romane von einer (neuen) politischen Ästhetik sprechen? (Wie) unterscheidet sie sich von anderen Formen politischen Schreibens in der Vergangenheit? Welche Theorien und Methoden eignen sich, um Gegenwartsliteratur zu analysieren?

20, 121, 218. Religion and Secularism in Germany from the Nineteenth Century to the Present

This seminar probes the complex relationship between religion and secularism in Germany and its societal consequences. It is easy but misleading to postulate a fundamentally hostile relationship between these two. For one, Catholicism, Protestantism, Judaism, and Islam were anything but homogenous; significant differences existed not only between but within each over how to position oneself in politics, society and the so-called “modern” world with its default assumption of secularity. For another, secularism and secularity were not coherent concepts. Secularism ran the gamut from laïcité and anticlericalism to free-thinking, materialism, agnosticism, and atheism. Secular ideas emerged out of religious institutions and inquiry—and vice versa; religious discussions of gender, sexuality, and capitalism were shaped by complicated interactions with secularist views. This seminar aims to explore how religion and secularism defined themselves and each other vis-à-vis the other and its impact on the lives of the faithful, indifferent and skeptical.

22, 122, 219. Renegotiating the German Post-War Model in an Era of Crisis

Since the early 2000s, Germany’s post-war model has been beset by a series of social, economic, and political shocks. Germany’s social market economy traditionally protected firms and labor in strategic export-intensive sectors, while frequently excluding actors outside these sectors, especially racial minorities and women. The model worked for decades even through unification (with some modifications). But a series of challenges—the European sovereign debt crisis, the refugee crisis, Covid-19, the rise of the Alternative for Germany, and the climate crisis—has put this model under intense strain, leading to an ongoing reconsideration of its beneficiaries, distribution of burdens, and lines of inclusion and exclusion. This seminar will investigate these questions across a wide range of policy, social, and institutional domains, including Germany's Social Market Economy, its response to the mounting climate crisis, authoritarian challenges to German democracy, gender relations, the party system, immigration, and foreign policy.

23, 124, 221. Teaching Global Germany (sponsored by the Teaching Network)

Recent scholarly developments in German Studies and German history, including in Black German Studies, Asian German Studies, migration studies, and postcolonial studies, have moved the field beyond the nation-state to focus on comparative and transnational approaches to understanding German history and culture. How can we bring these scholarly developments into the classroom and thus contribute to universities' efforts to globalize and decolonize their curricula? How can we break out of the framework of the nation-state in teaching German history and culture? How can we introduce transnational and global perspectives in our teaching? Inspired by the success of past teaching seminars, this seminar invites participants to workshop syllabi and major assignments focused on exploring how Germany has been and is connected—in various ways—with the world. Our goal is to generate new approaches to teaching global Germany that also highlight active student learning and digital tools/resources.

25, 126, 224. Weimar Germany: Taking Stock and Moving Forward

More than a century after its emergence in the turbulent aftermath of the First World War, Weimar Germany remains a productive site for the exploration of Western-style modernity. If anything, the resurgence of far-right and neo-fascist politics has intensified interest in the republic's struggle for democracy and its catastrophic demise. This seminar seeks to gain a better understanding of where this scholarly field has been and where it might be going. How can we think and speak of the first German democracy in ways other than teleological narratives of impending doom, while also avoiding anachronistic analogies? Can we place the republic in transatlantic or global contexts that embrace the openness—and, indeed, promise—of the first German democracy? What did Weimar, in all its complexity and diversity, look and feel like? Our goal is to map out the broader field of Weimar studies and explore opportunities for collaboration.
